The Movies

I like to see the picture play where everything comes out O. K., where villains always meet their fate and true love always wins a man. They part the miser from his hoard and Cinderella weds a lord. A bridge is blown up into bits; the pie that's thrown always hits; the freeman always saves the child; the sheriff's posse, swift and wild, arrives and saves the hero's life just as the savage draws his knife; the injured man regains his health; the business venture leads to wealth; the angler always catches fish; the angry housewife throws a dish and lands it on the mark; she chose, instead of some one else's nose. They find the uncle's long-lost will; some angel pays the poor folk's bill. O, when I'm tired, sick and sore I like to look the movies o'er, for ten cents worth of film at night just seems to set this old world right.

London Opinion.
"Come, Cecil, a little English boy should love the sea."
"But I don't want to bathe in the German Ocean!"

Too Well Remembered

"Did your late uncle remember you when he made his will?"
"I guess so—for he left me out."—Longhorn.

She Had Heard It Before

"Chauncey said that I was the only girl he had ever loved."
"Doesn't he say it beautifully, dear?"—Jack o' Lantern.
